I just got to watch this 8 million pound behemoth float down the Hudson river, through NY Harbor. Even more special watching my dad stand up front, babysitting his brainchild beneath his company logo, passing the Statue of Liberty. Many others will take credit for this, but we here know it was he who envisioned building something like this so massive on an unused port in upstate, NY and placed on a barge, rather than assembled in pieces overseas. Nothing of its kind has ever floated through NY Harbor. But seeing this doesn't capture his years of grit, technical skill, and salesmanship needed to achieve this - creating 350 union jobs that normally go overseas. Not bad for a 78 yr old immigrant.

Massive steam generator goes down Hudson River to New Jersey

A huge steam generator is making its way down the Hudson River toward its home at a New Jersey power plant.
